The Strange Sensations Produced by Taking a Chinese Drug.

A Battle Creek letter to the Evening News of Detroit, parrates this experience. Your reporter at Battle Creek hearing that one of the cit zens of that city was an habitual user of the Chinese drug canabis judica lindica? —the properties of which are similar to opium—and possessing an innate curiosity to witness and experience some of the strange sensations produced by this wonderful drug, called upon him and explained the object of his visit.

"Certainly," responded the small Frenchman who answered the question. "Certainly, monsieur; you shall see ze grand, ze wonderful, ze delightful feeling—you shall feel it yourself!

Come Sunday afternoon."

Sunday afternoon found the reporter prompt at his appointment. After a short chat, the newly made acquaintance produced the drug. It was ground to a brown tinted powder. He took a small quantity on his knife blade and put it into a glass of deliciously flavored water for each of us. It tasted like a nectar of the gods. I experienced no immediate sensation, and endeavored by various devices to keep my mind in as free a condition as possible. In about an hour a strange feeling was perceptible in my left foot, as though it were becoming numb, then my right foot was similarly affect-ed. Slowly, the strange, prickly feeling as cended my limbs-slowly but surely it went up, leaving nothing but dull, heavy and unfeeling limbs over which I had no control. Slowly it ascended up to my body, a dead dying, sensation. At this moment a feeling of the utmost agonizing and blood eurdling terror tock pos-session of mc-a feeling that I was dying by inches from my feet up, and so rapidly that my flesh and blood were being converted into unfeeling stone. I became excited. Perspiration stood in great drops like beads upon my forehead. Then my brain began to work with lightning speed, one thought chasing another with such terrific rapidity that I could not retain it a sufficient length of time to comprehend the idea. I seemed to know things I could not unfathom previously; and mazy, intricate questions were now so plain to me that I wondered I had not seen them before. My mind seemed capable of grasping and comprehending any thought. Then ensued a pressing, crowded feeling, I wanted room, I must have room. 1 was stifling for it ! I pushed books, papers and pamphlets from the table to the floor, that I might have room. But, ob, horrors! I felt my very life being pressed up, up into my head by this deathly clammy feeling. I was dring! I attempted to rise, but could not move a muscle. I seem to feel now in my remembrance as I did on that afternoon. My life was being pushed up into my head, until my brain seemed, as it were, flooded, drowned. My soul and mind, which at that moment became as distinct and vivid to my sight as the most material thing of earth, was pressed out and took its departure from the body, which now appeared like a ten-antless ruin beneath it. Then ensued such a panorama of beauties that I reveled in sensations. O ye gods I how I drank, and like a ravenous animal licked in the wonders, which like a moving world of grandeur passed before my eyes. Wherever i turned there, more fascinating still, stood palaces and eastles which would cause Poseidon and Cleito to turn from their grand old castle and beautiful grounds, so majestically situated on the isle of Atlantis, with disgust at the possession of such an insignificant abode in comparison with these palaces. Then there passed before me in rapid succession full equipped armies of infantry, composed of half civilized beings, accompanied by archers, and headed by a treacherous face; vast suspension bridges spanning deep dark roaring waters; multitudes of detenceless women and children. Strains of music, which even Wagner's grandest conception could not imitate, held a strange and powerful control over me. How long I remained thus I do not know. When I awake and recovered my senses it was dark. The little Frenchman had not yet aroused. I took my hat and left. My head and brain accomed oppressed as by a severe headache, and my limbs tottered and shook from weakness and uncontrol. My nerves seemed partially shattered. The cool outdoor air partially revived me, but I did not entirely recover from the stuper for days.

I would warn all to referio, from curiosity or other motives, from tasting the cup, for it requires a strength and determination of will but little realized to refrain from trying it again and again, until one becomes a slave to the terrible habit, with loss of all mental vigor, to say nothing of the danger to life. Its effects are very weakening, and left my whole system, body and mind, in an excited and weak condition for days. For fine Clothing see Dealham, 62 King street, corner of Pairfax.
